Book by Maloof, Alfreda Ward

Freda Maloof has written a small classic and brought a moment of history back to life. Beautifully and authentically illustrated, her Recollections of life in the Southwest and with Maria Martinez in the 1930s add an important note to our history. -- Michael Ambrosino, Public Broadcasting Associates Inc....a unique and engaging, true-life tale that will fascinate those readers with an interest in Native American Studies, education, and New Mexican artist/potter Maria Martinez. -- The Midwest Book , June 1998...her account captures the flavour and excitement of working with children--and adults--who sometimes wondered what the education they were offered was all about....For a time Maloof lived and worked with the renowned traditional [New] Mexican potter Maria Martinez.....This ia a basic account of the making and firing processes briefly but effectively told by means of photographs and short captions. They tell a story which is as old as pottery itself. -- Ceramic , London, England, July/Aug 1998a gem for those interested in New Mexicana Recollections is highly recommended for its historical tidbits and photographs. -- Southwest Book Views Winter 2003 Excerpt.
